dehydrated, and frozen raw food for a variety of diets. Pouches, toppers, and gravies are also available to enhance the nutritional needs of pets. In addition, PFW now sells supplements with homeopathic herbs and CBD products.

"Treats and chews are always a great seller," said Phil Truscott, PFW Accessory Buyer and Advertising Coordinator "because people like to have a snack on hand for training purposes or just to reward their animals." PFW suggests healthier chews like Bully Sticks, Water Buffalo Horns, or raw frozen marrow bones rather than rawhide or synthetic nylon chews.

In addition to taking care of the nutritional needs of pets, PFW caters to their psychological needs. Old favorites like Nylabones, Kong rubber toys, and tennis balls are still available for your canine companion, but Phil notes that there are wider offerings now. "We have learned more over the years about the needs and instructions of the minds of our pets," he said. "We carry self-feeding and interactive puzzle toys and every type of orislike, squeak, honk, or rattle that will bend the ear or wag the tail of an inspired pet."

Pet Food Warehouse actively supports humane societies, shelters, and rescue organizations in their mission to better the lives of animals and place them in forever homes. One example of this outreach is the Primate's Pal program which pays adoption fees, food for a year and a PFW gift card for an adopted pet every month. The animal chosen by the humane societies of Chittenden County, Addison County, Central Vermont, and the North Country Animal League.

The staff also takes part in the annual Wag It Forward, A Festival for Pets hosted at the Champlain Valley Exposition in Stowe, VT.
